1. Background

a. The United States Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) leads, plans, synchronizes, and as directed, executes global operations against terrorist networks. They train, organize, equip, and deploy combat ready special operation forces to combatant commanders. Their mission is to provide fully capable Special Operations Forces to defend the United States and its interests.

b. USSOCOM is the joint headquarters for all Special Operations Forces component commands. Personnel assigned represent all services, both active duty (ACDU) and reserve, civil service employees, and contractors. As the combatant command (COCOM) designated to lead efforts against terrorist networks, assigned personnel are expected to adhere to strict standards that will not jeopardize their security clearances in any manner. Military members must be able to work in a diverse and large organization while maintaining a high level of physical fitness.

c. Personnel assigned will have ample opportunity for professional gratification. There are many intangible rewards in being assigned to the nation's premier warfighting command. Members who are looking for a challenging assignment are encouraged to apply.
